Energy Education at Community Colleges: Issues, Solutions, and Resources for You!

Abstract

There has been substantial progress on the offering of energy education at community colleges in technical, business, and other degree programs and certificates but much more needs to be done. This presentation will be geared to participants' needs and will include descriptions of success stories, common challenges and possible solutions, the essential components for energy literacy in any program, and strategies for growth of these courses and programs. Participants will leave with an understanding of national trends, a list of exciting opportunities, informational resources and tools, and new connections for support and success.
